WAT PARIWAT

734 Rama III Rd, Khwaeng Bang Phong Phang, Khet Yan Nawa, Bangkok 10120 Thailand

Inexperienced travelers will invest considerable effort to reach this destination, which is notably remote and lacks convenient access to nearby attractions. Despite the well-intentioned advice of the "Youbee-Tubee," suggesting to use river taxis or the MRT/BTS system, the most effective strategy is to print the address in Thai and seek a taxi willing to go to this outlying location. However, securing such a taxi can prove to be a challenging endeavor.
Upon arrival, you will dedicate approximately 15 to 20 minutes to exploring the area, during which you can capture a selfie alongside the iconic figure of Popeye. As you search for a taxi to return, you depart without comprehending the intricate, eccentric, and hidden significances embodied in the multitude of statues that populate the space. These sculptures serve as a testament to a vastly different reality that thrived long before the emergence of the First CIS Humans, inviting a deeper reflection on the historical narrative it represent.

In a realm dominated by the rampant proliferation of genetically altered and improperly synthesized DNA samples, the practice of Gain-of-Function (GOF) DNA research and engineering had been rendered illegal across the Multiverse.

This prohibition compelled research scientists to relocate to the penal colony known as Earth, where, as illustrated by this assemblage of statues, they engaged in unrestrained and chaotic experimentation.
